GYM SERIES / INTENTIONAL TRAINING

PUT YOUR MIND WHERE YOUR WEIGHT IS.

THE INTENTIONAL TRAINING FOCUS GUIDE

A field manual for bringing your attention into the movement — not just keeping your phone down, but putting your mind where it belongs.

ATTENTION IS TRAINING.

ACT, DON'T REACT.

YOU CAN BE PHYSICALLY IN THE GYM AND MENTALLY SOMEWHERE ELSE.

FROM THE EARLY SESSIONS

There were training sessions early on where I was physically moving weight but mentally handling a dozen other things — work, messages, plans, whatever was next on the list. I was doing the reps just to get them over with. That's when I understood: distracted reps don't build discipline. They train you to check out when things get uncomfortable. The habit of avoidance was being reinforced, not the habit of focus.

PDF #3 covers the phone protocol — keeping attention from leaking out through the screen. This guide goes deeper: once the phone is down, where does your attention actually go?

Being present in the gym is not complicated, but it is deliberate. You have to choose to be inside the movement rather than somewhere adjacent to it.

A REP WITHOUT ATTENTION IS JUST MOTION.

Motion accumulates. Attention compounds. The difference between the two is not visible in one session — but it becomes clear across weeks and months.

WHAT DISTRACTED REPS LOOK LIKE

- Rushing the movement just to finish the set
- Thinking about the phone between reps, not the movement
- Watching other people instead of tracking your own work
- Counting reps but not feeling anything — just getting to ten
- Moving weight just to finish — no attention on the work itself
- Resting too long because your mind left the session
- Finishing the set without knowing what you actually focused on
- Choosing weight based on ego rather than intention

ATTENTION IS TRAINING.

Where your attention goes during the set matters. This guide gives you a simple system for putting it somewhere useful.

BEFORE EVERY SET: NAME THE TARGET.

You don't need to know anatomy. You don't need form coaching. You need one simple question before every set:

WHAT AM I TRAINING RIGHT NOW?

Use broad categories only. The point is not to over-think — it is to place attention before the set begins.

PUSH

PRESSING / PUSHING PATTERN

FOCUS

Drive the movement forward with intention. Don't let the weight move you — you move the weight.

PULL

PULLING PATTERN

FOCUS

Bring the movement back with control. Pay attention to the return, not just the pull.

LEGS / DRIVE

LOWER-BODY PATTERN

FOCUS

Stay grounded through the full movement. Control the descent as much as the drive.

ARMS

SMALLER, TARGETED WORK

FOCUS

Keep attention on the working area. Slow is more useful than heavy here — presence over weight.

CARDIO

BREATH / RHYTHM / PACE

FOCUS

Steady breathing and consistent pace. When the mind wanders, the pace drifts. Catch the pace to catch the attention.

BEFORE EVERY SET — THREE STEPS

- 1 Name the category. Push. Pull. Legs. Arms. Cardio. One word is enough.
- 2 Choose one focus word. Drive. Control. Steady. Breathe. One cue for the set.
- 3 Start controlled. Don't rush the first movement just to begin. Set the tone with the first rep.

THREE QUESTIONS. BEFORE EVERY SET.

Most sets drift because they start without intention. These three questions take under ten seconds. They place your attention before the weight moves.

1 TARGET

"WHAT AM I TRAINING RIGHT NOW?"

Name it before the set. Push, pull, legs, arms, or cardio. One word. If you can't name it, you are already drifting.

If you cannot name the target, you are drifting.

2 TEMPO

"CAN I CONTROL THIS MOVEMENT?"

Not just the push or pull — the whole range. Controlled both ways. If the movement feels out of control, the weight is too heavy for intentional training.

If you cannot control the pace, slow down.

3 FINISH

"CAN I END THIS SET CLEAN?"

The last rep should look like the first. Stop before form collapses or ego takes over. A clean finish is more useful than grinding past intention.

If you cannot finish clean, stop before ego takes over.

USING THE CHECK IN PRACTICE

You don't need to answer these out loud or write them down every time. Run them in your head before the first rep. Once this becomes habit, the check takes under five seconds. The point is simply that you do not start moving until you've answered all three.

INTENTION BEFORE THE SET.
ATTENTION DURING IT.

CONTROL BEATS
CHAOS.

STAY INSIDE THE SET.

The goal is not to survive the set. The goal is to stay inside it — from the first rep to the last, with attention on the work.

01 START	START CONTROLLED Enter the set with your attention already placed. Do not rush the first movement just to get going. The first rep sets the tone for the rest. A controlled first rep is a signal to your attention: we're in this now. • Attention on the target before you move • Don't rush — the set starts at the first intentional rep • If the weight feels off, stop and adjust before continuing PUT YOUR MIND WHERE YOUR WEIGHT IS.
02 DURING	STAY INSIDE THE SET This is where drift happens. The mind wants to jump to the room, the next set, the person next to you, or the fact that this is uncomfortable. Your job for the duration of the set is the current movement. • Notice when your attention moves — redirect it back • Breathe through the set, not away from it • Count reps as cues to stay present, not just to finish ATTENTION IS TRAINING.
03 FINISH	FINISH CLEAN End the set before attention collapses into ego reps. The last rep should be as intentional as the first. Stopping with intention is not quitting — it is the discipline. • Do not chase the feeling of almost failing • If control is gone, the set is over • A clean finish preserves quality for the next set EVERY DAY FORWARD.
This protocol applies to every movement category: push, pull, legs, arms, or cardio. The structure doesn't change. Start controlled. Stay inside. Finish clean. 01 / 02 / 03. EVERY SET.

THE NEXT SET IS BUILT DURING THE REST.

What you do between sets determines the quality of the next one. This is not downtime. This is setup time.

If you haven't read the No-Drift protocol, start there. This page goes one level deeper — not just keeping the phone down, but using the rest window intentionally.

THE BETWEEN-SET RESET SEQUENCE

- 1 Log the set. Weight, reps — one note. Keep it fast.
- 2 Phone down. Logging is done. Phone goes face-down or in pocket.
- 3 Breathe. Not to recover from exertion — to close the last set and open the next one.
- 4 Name the next target. Run the 3-Point Check: target, tempo, finish.
- 5 Go again. Before the timer ends if possible — structured rest, not open-ended waiting.

WHAT REST IS NOT

Rest is not scroll time. It is not social time. It is not performance time for whoever might be watching. It is preparation time.

BETWEEN-SET QUESTION

"WHAT WORKED IN THAT SET?"

Ask once. Keep the answer short. What was controlled — and what drifted? That's your data for the next set.

BEFORE THE NEXT SET

"WHAT DO I WANT TO KEEP?"

Carry forward what worked. Adjust what didn't. You are not repeating a set — you are improving on the last one.

IF REST GOT TOO LONG

RESET THE TIMER. GO AGAIN.

Long rest is not failure. Getting back in is. The moment you notice the drift, that's the moment to start the next set.

IF YOUR ATTENTION LEAVES, THE WEIGHT GETS HEAVIER IN THE WRONG WAY.

These are the most common attention leaks during a session — and the immediate reset for each. Catch them early. One leak does not end the session.

LEAK EGO WEIGHT

RESET

Lower the weight. Intention requires a weight you can actually control. Ego weight trains distraction, not focus.

LEAK RUSHING REPS

RESET

Slow the pace. Rushing is avoidance. If you're racing through reps, your attention has already left the set.

LEAK LOOKING AROUND

RESET

Eyes back to your own work. The room has nothing for you right now. Name the target. Return to the set.

LEAK COMPARING

RESET

Stop chasing the room. Comparison is bad programming. Return to your plan. Your session exists on its own terms.

LEAK CHASING SORENESS

RESET

Return to the plan. Soreness is not the goal. Intentional reps are. Don't derail a focused session chasing discomfort.

LEAK CHANGING EXERCISES RANDOMLY

RESET

Finish the set you're in. Random changes mid-session signal that the plan has lost. Stick to the structure. Adjust after.

LEAK PHONE CHECKING

RESET

Phone down. Breathe. Name the next target. See the full protocol in Click. Lift. Don't Drift. (PDF #3).

LEAK THINKING ONLY ABOUT FINISHING

RESET

Breathe before the next set. Then name what you're actually training. Shift from "get through this" to "be inside this."

LEAK MIND WANDERING MID-SET

RESET

Notice it. Don't judge it. Return. The moment you notice the drift is the moment you can redirect. That redirect is the skill.

LEAK SESSION FALLING APART LATE

RESET

Lower the weight, slow the pace, run the 3-Point Check. One unfocused set doesn't end the session. Reset and go again. One step still counts.

IF YOUR ATTENTION DRIFTS ONCE,
CATCH THE NEXT REP. CATCH THE NEXT SET.
DON'T LET ONE LEAK BECOME THE SESSION.

NEVER TWO IN A ROW.

SAME WEIGHT. MORE ATTENTION. DIFFERENT SESSION.

You don't need a harder program. You need the one you have, done with more presence. Pair this guide with the Gym Focus Timer and the full No-Drift protocol for a complete attention system.
